Men of Influence

Courtesy of Saskatchewan Business Magazine
January/February 2007

For the sixth consecutive year, Saskatchewan Business Magazine has recognized some of the province's most influential men. Four of them, by virtue of their attributes and accomplishments, have their roots in workweek's market-area. They are:

Terry Baker

As chairman of the board, and a prominent player in agricultural circles, this Denzil-area farmer leads one of Saskatchewan's largest companies, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. Active in community affairs he has chaired the local school board, the church board and credit union boards. He currently sits on the board of the Canadian Centre for Health and Safety in Agriculture, Agrivita Canada and is an executive committee member of the Crop Nutrients Council.

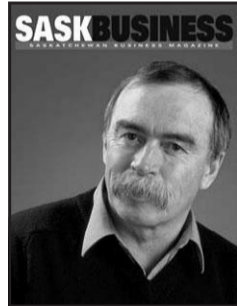

Nations business community. His background includes senior posts with the provincial government as well as currently serving as vice-chair of the Investment Saskatchewan board.

Florian Possberg

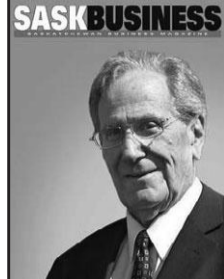

As chief executive of Big Sky Farms, the province's largest farming enterprise, he has become the prime voice of the production industry that has undergone significant consolidation and now faces an unsettling future on the processing side. He currently is vice-chair of the national industry association.

Ray McKay

As CEO of Kitsaki Management, for years he oversaw a portfolio of companies owned by the Lac La Ronge Indian Band. Despite his recent retirement, his leadership and influence continues to reverberate in the First

Mel Watson

Best known as the patriarch of a Weyburn family that grew to prominence in the farm equipment business, this former Saskatchewan Chamber of Commerce president sits on the board of Saskatchewan Power Corporation.
